Research Interests

Jake's research focuses on better understanding the causes and consequences of educational inequalities, evaluating policies and programmes aiming to reduce these inequalities, and how best to do this evaluation.

Employment

2016– University College London

2019– Associate Professor,

Centre for Education Policy & Equalising Opportunities (CEPEO)

Developing an ambitious research programme that contributes to the research profile of the Centre for Education Policy & Equalising Opportunities and securing large-scale funded research for this. Publishing research in high impact national and international peer-reviewed journals.

Contributing to teaching, particularly through contribution to Master's-level courses and supervision of graduate research students.

2019– Deputy Director,

Centre for Education Policy & Equalising Opportunities (CEPEO)

CEPEO carries out cutting-edge research focused on making significant reductions to the structural barriers that engender inequalities across the life course, and equalising opportunities for all. Education is the key policy lever for improving life chances across the life course. Our interdisciplinary work seeks to understand where, how and why inequalities arise in skill development, educational achievement, and beyond. We offer new ways in which policy and practice can be used to reduce these inequalities and equalise opportunities for all.

Leadership of Schools work stream. CEPEO's schools research explores this process, through approaches including rigorous quantitative analysis of longitudinal data and randomised evaluations, seeking ways in which education policy and practice can be improved to equalise opportunities. We have a particular focus on work on understanding how to attract, retain and develop the most talented teachers, and ensure great teaching is made available to children whatever their background.

Leadership of CREATE strand (Conducting Randomised Evaluations & Trials in Education), which champions the development and application of expertise in the use of randomised evaluations and related methods to understand policies and programmes in the work of CEPEO and beyond. We focus on how best to use randomised controlled trials and related methods to understand the effect of complex and multi-component interventions that are characteristic of our field. As well as carrying out evaluations, we critique the approaches typically taken by studies of this type and are developing innovative alternative approaches aiming to understand not just what works, but how. One of the ways we do this is by facilitating informed and critical engagement between strands of education research that too often does not occur, encouraging innovation and robustness of evaluation work in the field of education.

2019–2022 Academic Head of Research,

Department of Learning and Leadership, UCL Faculty of Education & Society

Responsible to the Head of Department for strategic planning, leadership and development of a high-quality research culture within the department. Oversight and support of departmental leads for enterprise and innovation, research engagement and impact, research ethics, research mentoring, and research seminars, in support of this aim.

Led strategic direction on and departmental review of research funding applications to improve department's success in grant capture. Organised departmental research skills development programme to improve research capacity.

Member of departmental Senior Leadership Team; member of faculty Research Committee; chair of departmental Research Committee; deputised for Head of Department as required.

Jan.–Sep. 2019 Interim Director, Centre for Education Improvement Science

Leadership and management of faculty flagship centre pending appointment of professorial centre director.

2016–2018 Senior Research Fellow, Department of Learning and Leadership

Researcher responsible for development of, and participation in, funded research projects in line with departmental priorities, producing high quality, impactful research.

Responsible for enhancing the department's methodological expertise through knowledge of advanced quantitative methods and experimental research design.

Reported to the Academic Head of Department for these responsibilities.

2014–2016 National Institute of Economic and Social Research

2015–2016 Research Fellow

2014–2015 Research Officer

Researcher working primarily on projects involving education or labour market transitions. Contributed to the writing of reports aimed at both academic and policy-making audiences.

Involved in projects commissioned by multiple government departments, including analysis of youth transitions into the labour market, evaluation of adult skills interventions, and analysis of patterns of education inequality.

Led successful applications for research contracts and funding from government departments and charitable foundations, including a large randomised controlled trial-based evaluation of a school-based intervention.

2013 House of Commons Education Committee,

Jan.–Jul. 2013 Committee Specialist

Secondment from PhD. Acted as in-house specialist for committee of Members of Parliament, including giving written and verbal briefings for Members of the Committee.

Role also involved acting as an Inquiry Manager with tasks including: researching possible areas of interest for the Committee; organising evidence sessions (including proposing, inviting and briefing potential witnesses); managing relationships with stakeholders (witnesses, external specialist advisers, civil servants, Members' staff, and others); drafting Committee reports; assisting in the preparation of press notices; and briefing for relevant Parliamentary debates.

As the role involved strict deadlines, and frequently responsibility for more than one ongoing inquiry at a time, excellent time management skills were vital. Also involved in improving Committee's public engagement, through social media.

Professional Development

Jake provides professional development focused on the use of experimental and quasi-experimental impact evaluation methods (for example, matching and weighting methods, longitudinal designs, and randomised controlled trials), primarily with applications in education. These can be tailored to organisations' existing expertise and experience profiles, helping improve teams' understanding of such methods and, hence, their ability to interpret evidence from and supervise work on these kinds of projects, for example.
